Our section continues to serve its members and the library community at large by adopting and considering new technologies and opportunities for communication, service, and training.

We have planned three continuing education programs for our members and the NJLA community for fall and winter, and are actively planning our proposals for the 2017 Conference.

We look forward to working with the continuing education team at NJLA and our section co-sponsors in a variety of collaborative programming efforts.

It will be a pleasure to honor another individual NJLA member with the Susan Swartzburg Award (http://njlamembers.org/content/susan-swartzburg-award) in recognition of his or her statewide leadership and dedication to the preservation or interpretation of archival, library, or historical materials at the 2017 conference.

Thanks to my fellow H&P members for being such an excellent team of dedicated and professional individuals. You’re a terrific group and it is a pleasure to work with everyone.

LIME CREST QUARRY: EONS IN THE MAKING, MEN IN THE MINING
Submitted by Nancy Madacsi, Secretary, Sparta Historical Society

Lime Crest Quarry: Eons in the Making, Men in the Mining opened at the Sparta Historical Society’s Van Kirk Homestead Museum on Sunday, September 25, 2016. The first major exhibit ever held on this important and historic Sparta quarry will explore the geology, minerals, men, and companies that held an interest in the quarry’s development over the past 125 years, including Thomas Edison’s involvement.

The Geology

The rock of major interest at the quarry was a limestone that initially formed under ancient shallow seas during the late Precambrian geologic period about 1.2 billion years ago. Through millions of years of heat (almost 1400 degrees Fahrenheit), faulting, and pressure, the limestone was metamorphosed or changed into marble and is geologically referred to as Franklin Marble.

The Sparta location is just one of many exposed parts of the Franklin Marble belt, most of which is buried under our feet. The original upper surface was a raised ridge or crest, thus providing the name LimeCrest. From that ridge, the marble extended down almost 750 feet. The quarry excavation itself is approximately 3000 feet long, 1500 feet wide and 300 feet deep.

The Edison Ore-Milling Company

The Edison Ore-Milling Company operated the iron mines on top of Sparta Mountain that are commonly referred to as Edison Mines. After ten years, Edison shut down the entire iron mining operation in 1899. He had spent over $2 million of his own fortune and an additional million from investors thus confirming the opinion of skeptics who referred to this venture as “Edison’s Folly.” Some of his losses were recouped by the sale of equipment to other mining companies. Even suffering such a loss, his interest in mining remained undaunted.

Portland Cement and the Edison Portland Cement Company

Edison formed the Edison Portland Cement Company around the same time as the closure of his Edison Ore-Milling Company on Sparta Mountain. The crushing or pelletizing process he introduced to iron mining resulted in concentrated iron ore sand and scrap rock sand. He sold the scrap sand to cement manufacturers, who capitalized on the harder, more durable concrete that it produced.

The Edison Portland Cement Company at New Village, NJ

Edison’s scientists looked to find stronger formulas and methods of manufacturing Portland cement. Their research led to the construction of the Edison Portland Cement Company’s kilns and processing facilities at New Village, NJ, near Phillipsburg in 1901. By 1905, this facility was producing 3,000 barrels of cement per day and the need for raw material with high calcium lime content was growing.
The Edison Portland Cement Company at Crestmore Quarry, Sparta, NJ

While many assume that Thomas Edison discovered the marble outcrop on the western edge of Sparta, photographs, circa 1895, in the Sparta Historical Society’s collections prove otherwise. The outcrop was owned by a Sussex Mills farmer who was mining the exposed marble on a small scale. It became the raw material to make agricultural lime in the owner’s as well as many other locally-owned kilns. At the time, this was known as the Crestmore Quarry. This quarry was leased by the Edison Portland Cement Company from 1906 to 1908. Unfortunately, the cost of shipping by railroad from Sparta to the New Village facilities proved too costly.

Back to New Village and New Ideas

While successful, Edison’s New Village facilities were still an expensive and risky venture given his precarious financial situation at the time. In 1908, he licensed the use of the facilities as well as some of his cement manufacturing patents to the North American Portland Cement Company. The Edison Portland Cement Company was the fourth largest producer of cement in America by the 1920s.

Thomas Edison never stopped thinking of new uses for his cement. There is the Concrete Mile, a stretch of NJ Route 57 in Stewartsville, NJ, built in 1912. This experiment proved that Portland cement could hold up as a road surface. The original road still exists today. Another idea was the pre-fabricated concrete house. Edison’s vision was to create affordable housing by pouring cement into molds in the shape of walls, floors, ceilings and even major fixtures. Within 8 hours, the mold could be removed and the house assembled. The houses were expected to sell for a modest $1200. Ultimately, Edison didn’t follow through with his plan, but it was adopted by others including one Charles Ingersoll, who built a number of pre-cast concrete houses in Union and Phillipsburg, NJ.

While business grew, the Edison Portland Cement Company was barely surviving financially. Then it received a new contract in 1922 for the construction of the original Yankee Stadium. Construction began on May 5, 1922, and was completed in just 284 working days. When the building underwent renovations in 1973, the walls were left untouched, a testament to the hardness and durability of Edison's Portland cement.

Edison's company only lasted a few years after the construction of Yankee Stadium, falling victim to the Great Depression.

Crestmore Quarry and Limestone Products of America

The Crestmore Quarry was abandoned between 1908 and 1919 when it was taken over by Limestone Products Corporation of America, which renamed the quarry and used the trade name of LimeCrest. It was mined almost continually until 2003 when Oldcastle, an Irish construction materials company, bought the operation to reduce global competition and closed it. The pumps were turned off and it was soon filled with water.

Today

Since then, there have been numerous owners and lessees with differing ideas about the future of the land around the quarry and of the quarry itself with an estimated 35 million cubic yards of marble remaining. Since 2012, the quarry has been owned by New Jersey-based Braen Stone Industries, Inc., a major supplier to the construction industry, and the quarry name has changed to Braen Stone of Sparta. After pumping the water out, Braen began mining marble for landscape use and agricultural lime as well as granite/gneiss for construction purposes. Today, the quarry is approximately 3000 feet in length, 1500 feet in width, and 300 feet deep.

The Sparta Historical Society’s Van Kirk Homestead Museum is located at 336 Main Street (Rte. 517, use Sparta Middle School driveway), Sparta, NJ. This fall exhibit, sponsored by Braen Stone of Sparta, will open on Sunday, September 25th and will continue to be open every 2nd and 4th Sunday of the month, 1 to 4 pm with a special gallery talk at 2 pm through Sunday, December 11th. MORRIS COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY
Submitted by Sara Weissman, Volunteer, Morris County Historical Society

Acorn Hall

The Morris County Historical Society will display historic election newspapers (1789 to 2008) October 30th through January 29th. The papers, property of Board Trustee Pete Tamburro, illustrate the various campaign promises, electoral obstacles, and political gaffes of over twenty U.S. presidents and their competition. While the highlight of this exhibit is the 1948 “Dewey Defeats Truman” headline of the Chicago Daily Tribune, the collection spans Washington’s election to Obama’s 2008 campaign.

The newspapers will be complemented by clothing, political paraphernalia, and cultural artifacts, among them an 1804 signed photograph of Thomas Jefferson; an 1876 dress worn to a party for the inauguration of President Rutherford B. Hayes; and a 1917 telegram sent by President Woodrow Wilson. For hours and fees for the Society museum at Acorn Hall, see http://www.acornhall.org.

New Curators in Morris County

The Morris County Historical Society has hired two new curators, who began work in September. Danielle Pace (Anthropology, Rutgers and Museum Studies, Seton Hall) came from Tiffany’s and the Donald B. Palmer museum in Springfield. Her internships ranged from the Intrepid to the American Museum of Natural History. Danielle Pace is at collectionsmchs@gmail.com

While Danielle oversees collections, Nicole Rizzuto will handle exhibits and research. Nicole, who started interning with the MCHS in 2013, is a History and Culture PhD candidate at Drew and an adjunct history instructor at New Jersey City University. Nicole Rizzutto can be reached at researchmchs@gmail.com

At the Newark Public Library, our year-long celebration of Newark's 350th anniversary continues. Our exhibit Newark at 350: Settlement, Growth, Renewal will remain up until the end of the year. The exhibit incorporates images from the Library's Charles F. Cummings New Jersey Information Center.

The library’s 2014 exhibit, This Is New Jersey, will be remounted at three federal courthouses over the next few months. Under the sponsorship of the Historical Society of the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey, the exhibit will spend a month at a courthouse in each of the regions of the state: North, Central, and South. It will be at the Martin Luther King Jr. Courthouse in Newark from September 15th to October 15th, the Clarkson S. Fisher Courthouse in Trenton from October 16th to November 15th, and the U. S. Post Office and Courthouse in Camden from November 16th to December 15th. This Is New Jersey incorporates the words of the late John T. Cunningham, New Jersey's prolific popular historian, and images from the Newark Public Library's collections. The exhibit honors both the history of the Garden State and the memory of Cunningham, who died in 2012 at age 96. The exhibit was curated by Thomas Ankner, a librarian in the Charles F. Cummings New Jersey Information Center at the Newark Public Library.

On September 7th, the library ran another installment of its Newark Lifetimes series, Conversations with Native Newarkers. The September program featured U.S. District Court Judge Jose Linares and State Senator Teresa Ruiz.

This summer, the Newark Public Library hosted an installation called Dedicated to Every Block in Newark, featuring a 14-foot long scale model of the city, with 30,000 individual structures [photo below].

Monmouth County Transportation History – An Overview

Speaker: Randall Gabrielan

Randall Gabrielan’s presentation is based on the Archives' annual exhibition opening October 3 and his introductory essay for the catalog. He will review several modes of travel that led to the settlement, and impacted the history of, Monmouth County, and that continue to shape the quality of life of county residents and visitors. In his slide lecture, Gabrielan will discuss both the vehicles and vessels that transported us and their impact on the history of a number of Monmouth towns.

Randall Gabrielan, after a long stint as an executive in the property-casualty insurance industry, turned an avocation into a second career through long-term leadership of the Middletown Township Historical Society and extensive writing activities. Since 1994, he has published more than forty books about places in five counties in two states, as well as a detailed study of a largely forgotten disaster, Explosion at Morgan. Gabrielan served as executive director of the Monmouth County Historical Commission from 2000 to January 1, 2015, when he was appointed Commissioner. At the Commission, among other activities, he organized the annual self-guided history tour, “A Weekend in Old Monmouth,” and produced videos on history themes. Gabrielan, the official Monmouth County Historian, has made significant contributions to the annual exhibits organized by the Monmouth County Archives and conducts the annual History Forum at Archives and History Day.

The Iron Horse in the Garden State, 1812 – 1930

Speaker: Dr. David Fowler

In the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, railroads had a pervasive presence and an immense social, economic, cultural, and technological influence. Then, as now, most people in New Jersey were within earshot, at least, of the sound of a train. Using a variety of media such as maps, printed works, and graphic images, Dr. David Fowler will discuss the early phases of railroads in New Jersey, as well as their influence on politics, agriculture, labor, technology, suburbanization, resorts, and immigration. Several New Jersey railroad “firsts” will also be highlighted.

David J. Fowler received his MA and PhD in American history from Rutgers University. In addition to being a consultant and researcher, he works as a Project Historian with Special Collections and University Archives at Rutgers University Libraries, where he edited the late Donald A. Sinclair’s Railroads and New Jersey: A Bibliography of Contemporary Publications, 1812–1901. In 2011 he served as guest curator for the exhibition All Aboard! Railroads and New Jersey, 1812–1930, which was mounted in the Special Collections gallery. A digital version of the exhibition is available online at RUCore, Rutgers University’s institutional repository. Fowler made significant contributions to the Revolutionary War exhibits of the Monmouth County Archives in 2002, 2003, and 2004.

Recent donation

In late August, the North Jersey History & Genealogy Center received a donation of about forty photographs of “Cedar Court”, the country estate of Otto Kahn. The photos were a gift from a patron who acquired them from the family of a realtor who sold the property in the early 1920s.

Otto Kahn (1867-1934), was a distinguished New York financier, builder of railroad empires, philanthropist, influential patron of the arts and friend to world leaders, opera stars, and artists.

From 1897 to 1920, Kahn and his family alternated residences between New York City and his country home in Morris Township. “Cedar Court” was designed by the firm Carrère & Hastings, who also designed "Blairsden" in Peapack-Gladstone, the New York Public Library on Fifth Avenue, and the Frick mansion, (now museum), in New York, among many other notable public, commercial and residential commissions. The images depict exterior views of the resplendent house and gardens from different angles and several focus on specific areas of the building, gardens, and landscaped grounds. The Kahns abandoned the Morris County estate when they moved into their new palatial estate in Long Island. The property was sold to an early diabetes institute that advocated a starvation diet for its patients before the discovery of insulin. The buildings were demolished in 1937, and now are the site of a corporate park.
Events: 1917 Wing Centennial

Has it really been 100 Years? In 1916, the cornerstone of a new Library building was laid along Miller Road and South Street, overseen by local philanthropist Grinnell Willis after a disastrous fire that burned the Library & Lyceum just blocks away. Although library service in Morris Township and Morristown actually started right after the Revolutionary War (and continued with the Library and Lyceum throughout the 19th Century), our current “old wing” of the library dates to its grand opening in October of 1917. Join us as we host a whole year of programs – sponsored generously by the Friends of the Library – that are tied into our anniversary.

BOOKS ARE THE THING!

This is a column of books about books, or people who love books, or....

Joe Da Rold, reviewer

On sabbatical from teaching college literature, Brottman starts a book club in a men’s prison. The books she selects are an odd mix, starting with Conrad’s Heart of Darkness, which she herself admits is a difficult read. The reader soon gets the feeling she is trying to convert them to “fine literature,” and it doesn’t work. The men respond better to Burrough’s Junkie and Stevenson’s Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. Their reactions to Lolita surprise her, where she sees a love story, the men are disgusted by an unrepentant pedophile. Upon meeting some of the convicts after their release, they tell her that reading was just a way for the men to escape the boredom of prison; there has been no carryover into their everyday lives. On the positive side, Brottman makes a strong case for the need to read some books multiple times to understand all of their layers.

This look at how one of the world’s most important cultural treasures was almost destroyed reads like a thriller. Hammer sets the legacy of Timbuktu’s medieval manuscripts against centuries of terrorism from jihadists and terrorists in Mali and North Africa. The invasion of Mali by Morocco in the 16th century caused book-collecting families to hide and bury their manuscripts to keep them from theft and destruction. With the advent of French Colonialism in the 19th century, the prevalence of the French language led to many being unable to read the old languages. The history and culture of these African civilizations was becoming lost, and Africa became the “dark continent.” The eventual surfacing of these manuscripts refuted the European scholars who maintained that North Africa had no literacy tradition. The book follows Abdel Kader Haidara, who personally accumulated 16,500 manuscripts from tribal families, creating two of the largest private and public collections of Arabic handwritten books in the world. Archivists will recognize the dilemma of those who were fearful of parting with manuscripts that had been safeguarded by their families for centuries. Hammer’s detailed description of the rise of present-day terrorism is fascinating, though it sometimes overshadows the history of the manuscripts. Readers may opt to skim chapters to get back to the main focus of the book.

100 Years of Newspapers: ‘Dewey Defeats Truman’ and other Historic Newspapers of the American Presidency: presented by Pete Tamburro
Thursday October 13th at 7 pm

Historian and Morris County Historical Society board member Pete Tamburro will discuss his personal collection of original newspapers highlighting many famous political events.

Certainly newspapers have played a large role in hindering and helping candidates reach the highest office, but they have also acted as an historical record of the times as well as an opinionated measuring stick of everyone who graced the Oval Office. His collection ranges from Washington’s presidency through Barack Obama and features the first appearances of the Elephant and Donkey used for the two major political parties (drawn by Thomas Nast, for whom the North Jersey History & Genealogy Center has a collection) as well as reports of the assassination of President Kennedy and the deaths of Woodrow Wilson, Franklin Roosevelt and others.

Mr. Peter J. Tamburro, Jr. recently joined the Morris County Historical Society’s Board of Trustees. A life-long resident of Morris County, a distinguished educator and author, Mr. Tamburro taught U.S. History in Morris County for 32 years. He was named New Jersey’s Outstanding Teacher of History in 1990, was awarded the Woodrow Wilson Foundation Fellowship in World History at Princeton University in 1991, and held a Council for Basic Education Fellowship in World History in 1993.

He served on historic commissions in East Hanover and Long Valley, and now lectures throughout New Jersey on local history, the U.S. Constitution, and public policy matters.

The library is collaborating with The Morris County Historical Society in recognition of this presidential election year to present this program.

Plainfield Public Library – submitted by Sarah Hull, Head of Local History

The Local History Department is offering a wide range of programs over the next few months. On October 12th at 10 am, there will be Find My Past database workshop. Findmypast provides access to an ever-expanding collection of over two billion historical records from around the world, including US censuses from as far back as 1790, the largest collection of Irish records anywhere online, and US military records from the Revolutionary War up to World War II. On October 25th at 7 pm, join us for The Legend of Sleepy Hollow and the Hessians. Civil War Historical Reenactor and Lecturer, Michael Jesberger, will present a program on one of America's oldest short stories based on real accounts that took place in the Hudson Valley of New York during the American Revolution. For the third year, on October 26-27, the library will simulcast NARA’s Virtual Genealogy Fair, starting at 10 am each day.

November will bring the reception and grand opening of the library’s 11th Annual Photography Competition on November 12th from 10 am to noon. A workshop on using Newspapers.com database will be held on November 16th at 10 am. On November 17th at 7 pm, the library presents, “Gotcha!”: Snapshots that Made History. In this lecture photojournalist Jim DelGiudice will look at some of the accidentally historic photographs that not only changed history, but have become the icons by which we remember great events.
