KEYNOTE SPEAKER: DR. PAUL ISRAEL - “NEW JERSEY: A STATE OF INNOVATION”

“Dr. Israel is a perfect speaker to complement this year’s theme and exhibit, ‘New Jersey in Focus: Inventors and Innovators in Monmouth County,’” said Monmouth County Clerk Christine Hanlon. “I am sure he will give an interesting and memorable presentation, just like our past Archives and History Day keynote speakers.”

Dr. Israel will discuss the history of technological innovation in New Jersey. He will begin by detailing how New Jersey became a center for technological innovation in the nineteenth century with the development of new transportation and manufacturing technologies. His talk will then focus on how New Jersey became a leader in telecommunications and electrical innovation long before the emergence of Silicon Valley. In particular he will highlight four important institutions—Speedwell Village, Edison’s Laboratories, Bell Labs, and RCA Labs. Dr. Israel will conclude his talk with a brief discussion of present-day technological innovation in the state.

In addition to publishing Edison’s papers and biographies about him, Dr. Israel teaches the history of technology at Rutgers and has written numerous other articles and books, including From Machine Shop to Industrial Laboratory: Telegraphy and the Changing Context of American Invention, 1830-1920 (Johns Hopkins University Press, 1992). In these works, he has been examining technological creativity, the origins of modern innovation, technological enterprise, patent regimes, and the intersections between science, technology, and business.

HAPPENINGS AT THE NEWARK PUBLIC LIBRARY
Submitted by Tom Ankner, Librarian, Charles F. Cummings NJ Information Center

We have an active autumn planned at The Newark Public Library.

Our Latino Heritage Celebration opened in early September with an exhibit, Boricuas in the Garden: The Story of Puerto Ricans in New Jersey. The exhibit traces the history of Puerto Ricans in the Garden State with archival materials, historic photographs, and documents about individuals and the community organizations they established, many drawn from the Library’s holdings in the Puerto Rican Community Archives, part of the New Jersey Hispanic Research and Information Center. It also features a selection of extraordinary works from the Library’s Puerto Rican Fine Prints Collection. This exhibit will remain on the Library’s 2nd floor gallery until the end of the year.

In our first floor gallery is another exhibit, We Are Still Here: Taino Survival and Identity, co-sponsored by the Newark Public Library and the Puerto Rican Day Parade of Newark. Through contemporary art that refers to historic artifacts, traditional ceremonies, and current issues of politics and culture, the exhibit celebrates the survival of the Taínos, the indigenous people of the Caribbean, and their culture in the Caribbean and U.S. diaspora. We Are Still Here will remain up through the end of October.

We also have a series of programs tied to the Latino Heritage Celebration. A comic book talk and signing with artist Edgardo Miranda-Rodriguez is scheduled for October 14. The award-winning documentary The Borinqueneers will be screened October 28. A public forum focusing on Puerto Rico’s crisis and political future is scheduled for November 4. And Eating Puerto Rico, a cooking demonstration and tasting, will take place November 18.

The exhibit Over Here: Newark in World War I, 1917-1918, will remain in our 3rd floor gallery until March 2018. This exhibit commemorates Newark’s important contributions to the conflict. See historic photographs, sheet music, pamphlets, posters, and other materials, from the Collections of the Newark Public Library.

Our annual Philip Roth Lecture took place September 28. This year’s speaker was Robert Caro, author of celebrated biographies of Lyndon Johnson and Robert Moses. The Philip Roth Lecture is named for Roth, a Pulitzer-prize winning novelist who grew up in Newark.

The Library is continuing to digitize materials under the $1 million Carnegie Corporation grant it received last year. We began the second year of the 2-year grant in August. We have been digitizing photographs, maps, newspapers, personal papers, government documents, and fine art. Our digitized collections can be viewed at digital.npl.org.

This summer, we launched The Library Music Sessions, a series of Friday night dance parties in our courtyard. The free events have proved enormously popular, attracting as many as 400 people. Our Halloween dance party, scheduled for Friday, October 27, will be a fundraiser to offset costs for the events. Admission has tentatively been set at $20 to $25 for the Halloween party.

Our annual benefit gala, Booked for the Evening, is scheduled for Thursday, November 30. It will be held at Nanina’s in the Park in Belleville, and will include an awards ceremony and after-party.
EISNER MEMORIAL RED BANK PUBLIC LIBRARY RECEIVES DONATION FOR ONGOING DIGITIZATION PROJECT
Submitted by Barbara Pickell, Librarian, Red Bank Public Library

The Eisner Memorial Red Bank Public Library received a check from the Investor’s Bank for $1,500 to help with the ongoing digitization project. The library has been working to make a variety of material, including Red Bank Regional High School yearbooks, available online. This year, the project will add yearbooks from Red Bank Catholic High School, with plans to expand the number of local schools in the future. The truly exciting project for this year, covered by the grant, will be digitizing the Echo and the Mail & Express, historic African American-owned newspapers covering the Red Bank area from 1904-1937. The library believes this material is not accessible except on microfilm in the building at this time, so it will be a unique contribution to local history.

MORRIS COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY ADOPTS READER-FRIENDLY LABELING STANDARDS
Submitted by Sara Weissman

While mounting its latest exhibit, Cutting Edge: 100 Years of Medicine in Morris County, the Morris County Historical Society revised its label typography, for improved legibility. The new layout of Baskerville 20 or 22 point; 1.15 paragraph spacing; left alignment (ragged right margin); small caps headers brings labels closer to ADA standards and makes them more readable across greater distances in exhibit areas.

NEWARK PUBLIC LIBRARY MAP RESTORATION PROJECT

Submitted by Tom Ankner, Librarian, and Written by Myles Zhang, Archival Assistant, Charles F. Cummings NJ Information Center

The Newark Public Library has an extensive collection of historic maps covering the state’s and Newark’s history from the early 1800s to present-day. Among this collection are property-line maps, topographic maps, flood insurance maps, urban renewal maps, and extensive fire insurance maps for all of Newark and much of the state.

The recent $1 million dollar Carnegie Grant will fund the preservation and digitization of archives relating to Newark and its African-American and Latino history. However, this grant does not cover all aspects of the Newark Public Library’s important work of preservation and education. One recent discovery of the 1868 topographical map of New Jersey, for instance, required extensive restoration, but the library lacked the funds to “properly” restore this item.

This map, measuring an incredible 6 by 8 foot is one of the oldest maps in our collection and one of the earliest and largest thorough topographical maps of the state. According to the Firestone Library at Princeton, this map was originally part of a 900-page report on the state’s geography.

Only ten copies of this map were produced. One copy was given to the state agricultural society and the remaining nine to each county clerk’s office “for the benefit of the people.”
This map has a remarkable degree of detail. With a scale of one inch to two miles, the map depicts every street, railroad line, and (for some villages) every building in the state. The soil-formations for the state are also drawn in detail; the predominant rock in each part of the state (limestone, shale, sand, etc.) is color coded in 25 distinct colors. The locations of mines and iron ore deposits (mostly in Northern NJ) are also indicated in black ink. Below is a detail view of the map’s extensive key.

Map key with 25 distinct colors indicating various rock formations.

The Newark section of the map with this author’s thumb for scale.

View of Lower Manhattan. Scale of one inch to two miles. In addition to New Jersey, this map also depicts the topography of southern New York and Philadelphia.
Here is an even closer view of the map, illustrating individual city streets in Central New Jersey.

The library’s copy of the map, however, was badly damaged. A pencil annotation on the map indicated it had been donated to the library in 1931 and was “incomplete.” For the following decades (and likely its entire life) it had been folded and forgotten in the bottom of a drawer. Over the years, the map had broken along its creases into 32 scraps. Below is the map prior to restoration.

The decision was made to carefully unfold the damaged map and to inspect its condition. After unfolding it, we realized the map was actually complete, though seriously damaged.

Due to the map’s size, decay, and delicate condition, sending it to an outside preservation company was cost prohibitive. However, with the library’s limited resources, we could affordably repair and scan the map.

The map was printed on thin and brittle paper but was fortunately mounted on sturdy linen. Archival quality linen hinging tape was purchased from Gaylord Archival for $60. This tape was sturdy and durable enough to stitch the map together again. Over two days labor, we carefully trimmed loose string hanging from the broken edges of paper and mounted the linen tape along each edge to hold the map together and prevent further fraying. At a future date, this tape can be removed without damage to the original.

Because of its size - 6 feet wide by 8 feet high - it would not have been practical to repair or scan in one piece. Refold the repaired map would have caused further damage. So, we repaired the map in four quadrants, each measuring 36 by 40 inches that could fit comfortably in a flat map drawer.
To preserve this delicate map, it was best to avoid handling. The decision was made to scan and upload online for use by library patrons and the general public. The Littman Architecture Library at the New Jersey Institute of Technology generously lent us their scanner for this map and nearly 150 other historic maps in our collection. The map was scanned in four parts at 600dpi tiff.

After scanning, the four parts were stitched back together in Photoshop (version CS5 acquired for free). See screenshot at right of the work in process.

In all, this restoration represents the cost of two days labor and $60 for archival-quality linen repair tape. This process is not perfect, but it is one possible course of action for libraries not willing or able to apply for a $3,000 grant to restore a single item in their collections.

Many thanks to librarians Tom Ankner and George Hawley for help scanning. This project would not have been possible without the generosity of Maya Gervits at the Littman Architecture Library. Restorations were made by Myles Zhang, an undergraduate student at Columbia University and archival assistant at the Newark Public Library.

An innovative new program at Rutgers University–Camden will offer participants a unique opportunity to learn the processes and techniques of historic preservation in the living classroom of Camden and nearby Philadelphia and southern New Jersey.

History enthusiasts and scholars, practitioners, and other interested members of the public are invited to engage in public history as the Mid-Atlantic Regional Center for the Humanities (MARCH) at Rutgers–Camden launches the new certificate in historic preservation program this September.

The non-degree, non-credit program is designed for anyone who wants to gain a deeper understanding of the vocabulary and discipline of historic preservation, explains Tamara Gaskell, public historian in residence at MARCH and co-editor of The Public Historian, the flagship journal in the field of public history.

“This includes everyone from members of historic preservation commissions, town planners, historic site administrators, and volunteers, to owners of old or historic buildings, architects, engineers, attorneys, and students,” says Gaskell.

According to MARCH’s public historian in residence, the research center began offering new continuing education classes and workshops in historic preservation last fall, with the intent of developing them into a non-credit certificate program if enough interest was generated.

“The response has been tremendous,” says Gaskell, “so we are officially launching the certificate program this fall.”

The new certificate program will offer an array of continuing education classes, as well as full- and half-day workshops. Experienced, working professionals will lead all of the classes and workshops, providing a realistic perspective on how the tangible remains of the past can be integrated within current environments.

“Students will gain basic competencies as well as a more in-depth understanding of contemporary historic preservation practices,” says Gaskell.

In order to be eligible for the certificate, students must earn 15 continuing education credits, including required courses “Introduction to Historic Preservation” and “American Architectural History,” as well as either “Preservation Planning” or “Materials and Techniques of Historic Restoration and Rehabilitation.” Some classes provide credit toward American Institute of Architects and/or American Institute of Certified Planners continuing education requirements. Students are also welcome to take individual courses or workshops without working toward a certificate.

Gaskell notes that the Rutgers–Camden program fulfills the greater mission of public history by supporting public historians and others who are working to preserve the remnants of the past found in our built environment.

“The public history and historic preservation help connect people to their communities, enhance the quality of life, and promote heritage tourism and economic development,” says Gaskell. “Simply put, they build stronger communities.”
